OUTDOOR SERIES FOR KIDS: Frogsicles and falling leaves at Ice Lake

When you're a frog, you can't bundle up for winter. When you're a tree, you can't stay warm by the fireplace. Curious about how different kinds of critters prepare for cold weather? Come to the Water Wiser Kids event Saturday, Oct. 21, at Ice Lake in Barrett Township!

Looking under rocks and using nets and buckets to dip into the water, children will see what what wiggly, squiggly creatures they can find. With guidance from Kettle Creek Environmental Educator Brittney Coleman, kids and their grownups will learn how the natural world changes to survive a cold Pocono winter.

"Some frogs hibernate at the bottom of the lake," Coleman says. "Some make their own natural 'antifreeze' that replaces the water in their cells at the first hint of frost. There's lots to see, learn and explore at this little lake and along its shore."

Ice Lake is part of a 79-acre natural area that protects the pure, safe waters of Cranberry Creek.
