HIKE EVENT: An eye for eagles at ForEvergreen in Analomink

ForEvergreen Nature Preserve in Analomink, Pa., has a trail that's barely a mile, with wide gravel paths and gentle terrain. The views are pastoral and lovely but not jaw-dropping.

And then you see the eagles.

Join Brodhead Watershed Association for a naturalist-led, easy hike on Saturday, April 20, at ForEvergreen to see the eagles and so much more.

Photographers spend hours here, long lenses at the ready. Walkers, runners and dog walkers often stop in their tracks to watch an eagle tending the nest, hanging out on a nearby snag, or perching at the top of the cell tower.

Yet eagles in the spring are only the most obvious joy of this place. In summer, you might see flights of bluebirds, stocky kingfishers diving for an aquatic meal, or turtles sunning themselves on logs in the pond. In fall, the large stand of milkweed is one of the best sites in Monroe County for Monarch butterflies. Acres of meadow plants left unmowed provide food and cover for juncos, titmice and cardinals in winter.

Year round, it's a welcome oasis for nature lovers in Stroud Township.
